The cat, which failure feared

Chapter 3 by Pencil

With his small loan of a million dollars he began ... Got his fur a wacko trim. Paid millions to get his face on shirts

He was sure to win.

Chapter 4 by Hop

But first he needed to know who he was competing against.

He saw them

He giggled

He chuckled

They were in no way a match

They had no shirts for their fans

No magical haircuts.
Instead they were screaming about politics
The cat though he should scream too

Chapter 5 by LiamLeblanc13

So he did.

But the cat had never been involved in political screaming before, and he wasn't sure what he should say.

So he insulted lots of people. This made the media mad.

Many people didn't like the cat. But he still had his shirts and his haircut and his magnificence, and that made lots of people happy.

But was it enough?
